Bye-Fellow secures exciting new role!

We were delighted to learn this week that Giulio Lucarini has secured a permanent position as Researcher with the Italian National Research Council which will allow him to continue his exciting archaeological work in Egypt, Tunisia, and in the near future, Morocco.

In Morocco he is looking to start a new research project with as its main topic the beginning of social complexity in northwestern Africa, via a prestigious collaboration with the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research based here in Cambridge.

Congratulations Giulio!

Start the year with a College Cup!

As you prepare for the coming year of lectures, supervisions, working in cafés, and so on, why not represent your College as you go about town?

50 years of women at St Edmund's!

2019/20 marks 50 years of women at St Edmund's. Significantly, St Edmund's became co-ed before all of the all-male Colleges, a claim to fame and something to be proud of!

To that end a mini-website has been created which will develop over the course of the year.

In particular, we are looking for women (students, Fellows, staff) who may be interested in writing about their time at St Edmund's, what they've been working on, where they're heading. We have already an exemplar story, of Margie Geib Wilkinson, the first woman to matriculate at St Edmund's – well worth a read!

If you might be interested in sharing your story, or finding out more, please do get in touch on press@st-edmunds.cam.ac.uk
